HISTORICAL SKETCH

SOME years ago the editor of the present volume planned and began work upon a complete Concordance to the poems of Robert Browning. So far as is known, this antedated any similar effort. The time was unpropitious and the work was laid aside. The formation of "The Boston Browning Society" in the winter of 1885-86 gave an impetus to the study of the poet, and seemed to make some kind of coöperation possible. On June 6, 1889, the Society held a special meeting at the Brunswick, to which all persons, whether members of the Society or not, that were interested in a Browning Concordance, were invited. Colonel Thomas Wentworth Higginson, the second President of the Society, was in the chair. After a statement of plan and some discussion, and the discovery that the work of the present editor antedated that of the Philadelphia Society, that had very generously offered to the Boston Society the concordance to "Pauline" already made by it, as a nucleus for any further enterprise, a committee was appointed to take the matter in charge. At first the number was limited to three, Dr. William J. Rolfe, Chairman, Miss M. A. Molineux, and the secretary of the Society, Mrs. John Rand, who would be able from her position to aid much in communicating with other members and in various ways, as well as in doing some portion of the literary work. The second member of the committee insisted that a committee of this importance would be quite incomplete without Colonel Higginson, and he was added, therefore, although he found it impossible to attend many of the meetings and was able to assist only by advice. The committee was empowered to add to its number as seemed advisable. The plan was to have the subject-matter, as represented by the Riverside Edition (loose sheets of which were kindly supplied by Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Company), divided among six ladies, Dr. Rolfe to edit the work when completed. Very early in the course of the proceedings the chairman announced that he should be unable, from press of other engagements, to do the editing, and proposed instead, that the second member of the committee should do it, as she already had in hand the most difficult portion, "The Ring and the Book." It was decided that a concordance was too bulky and unnecessarily elaborate an emprise, and that it would be hard to find any publisher willing to undertake a book so expensive and little remunerative, while a phrase-book might be made to fill all the important needs of student and writer, and at the same time be acceptable to any one with a few minutes of leisure, wishing to refresh mind and heart with a wise or beautiful sentence from the writings of the poet that more than any other since Shakespeare understood the inmost soul and motives of the human race in all the varied manifestations.

The summer time was thought the most advantageous, as the period of most leisure, and the ladies departed for their summer haunts, each armed with a volume.

Alas! when autumn came little had been accomplished, and from various causes several ladies had been obliged to relinquish the work and several volumes had changed hands. As the years went on and nothing of importance was done except by Mrs. Grace A. Oliver, Mrs. Rand, and Miss Molineux, the different portions of merely attempted work (some volumes entirely untouched) were sent by Dr. Rolfe to Miss Molineux. Meanwhile the original plan had become much modified. Instead of repeating each phrase three or four times under as many different catch-words, it was suggested by Dr. Rolfe that a "one-word index" should be substituted, and it is believed that this somewhat novel feature will be found an efficient and convenient substitute. It was with regret that the editor was obliged to entirely revise and add to the work done by Mrs. Oliver and Mrs. Rand, who had so faithfully and enthusiastically finished their respective volumes.

After the manuscript was in the possession of the publishers a new complication arose. An edition of Browning's complete works to be contained in one volume was projected, and it seemed advisable to add references to that as well as to the first and second Riverside editions. The editor was easily convinced that it would be for the advantage of every one concerned to carry out this scheme. The delay incident to an entire revision of the work for this purpose has postponed the publication until this time, when the Boston Browning Society, under the auspices of which it was so long ago begun, has almost ceased to expect its completion. Although the first of the three to whom the book was inscribed has passed from earth, the dedication is left as it was written. It is permitted to speak more openly of the dead than of the living, and the editor may acknowledge her special indebtedness to Colonel Stone, through whose courtesy, and that of his wife, the secretary, she received an invitation to the first meeting of the Society.

"Childe Roland to the Dark Tower came."

“TO THE DILIGENT READER”

THE order of the phrases has been modified from the strictly alphabetical in the one case of the nouns and their compounds. The declensional order is taken and the compound of each case follows next, before proceeding further in the declension. At first it was also planned to treat the verbs similarly and, in consequence of the change from this first intention, it is possible that a verb-form or two may be found out of order and immediately following the main verb, having inadvertently escaped the many eyes overlooking the publication.

When spelled alike the noun and adjective, or the noun and verb, appear in groups under the same catch-word in the order of their position in each volume of the Riverside Edition, the noun-group always having precedence.

The attempt has been made to print the punctuation of the original intact, except for the ending of most phrases where no stop was made by the Poet at that especial word. Occasionally a dash has been used to denote suspension, or to suggest the note of interrogation that comes several lines farther along on the original page, or a semicolon, note of exclamation, or interrogation has been left as in the context, even when taste would have substituted the period. Dots replace omitted words.

Italics where important have been left; but some phrases, such as those from the songs in “Pippa Passes,” have been put in Roman letters. In the main it has been the endeavor to omit no mark that would aid the searcher in identifying a desired quotation, whether looking in this volume only or in tracing it to the page of either the seven volume or six volume “Riverside,” or the one volume “Cambridge” editions; where change has been made in the readings in the latter and newer edition, the older has been followed except where a misprint was obviously corrected.

In the first volume of the older edition “Pauline” is repeated at the end, after Page 412, as an Appendix, pagged as at the beginning, but with the addition of a star to differentiate it as the Revision by the Poet. In several instances a phrase from this poem has been repeated when there has been any notable change in the revised version.

There are no quotations from the "Alkestis" and the "Hera-kles" of Euripides, nor the "Agamemnon" of Æschylus, since these are translations and not original work. Many words will be found only in the Index, because the phrases in which they occur are comparatively unimportant for quotation, or the words themselves alone are noteworthy. Especial pains has been taken with the compounds, a remarkable feature in Browning's style, although he does not always divide a compound by a hyphen even when spelled identically; for instance, Up-thrust, Sor. 1: 195. C. 75. Upthrust, Sor. 1: 287. C. 111. The English editions are all marred by careless proof-reading, and in consequence some contradictions must be left for fear of correcting what the Poet expressly intended to stand.

In the Index words compounded with prefixes, such as "a," "re," "un," precede the forms without a hyphen, just as if the prefix had standing as an independent word. It is thought that this arrangement will facilitate search, when once understood, and at the same time call attention to the variety of the compounds. Some subjects of little extraneous value have been given but one reference — such are Molinism and Jansenism. The distinction of noun and verb references, the noun-group having precedence, has been confined to the phrases.

Yet others record a son of Pythagoras named Telauges and a daughter, Myia, and some say, also Arignota, born of Theano, of Cretan race, the daughter of Pythonax, and they report that Pythagorean writings by these have been preserved. Timaeus, moreover, writes that the daughter of Pythagoras, while still a girl, was the leader of the chorus of girls in Croton [the south Italian town where Pythagoras settled], and after her marriage, the leader of the women. He says that the people of Croton made Pythagoras' house a temple of Demeter, and called his street Museum Street.

Lycus, in the fourth book of his histories, reports that some authorities differ even concerning Pythagoras' native land. He says, "If you do not know the land and the city of which this man happened to be a citizen, do not be disturbed, for some say he came from Samos, some from Phleius [in the Peloponnesus], and some from Metapontum [in southern Italy]."

Further, as concerns his teaching, most writers say he learned the sciences called mathematical from the Egyptians, Chaldaeans, and Phoenicians (for from ancient times the Egyptians have studied geometry, the Phoenicians number theory and arithmetic, and the Chaldaeans astronomy and astrology). However, they say that in matters dealing with the services of the gods and the other concerns of life, he was a student of the Magi and took his doctrines from them. Now his doctrines are almost commonly known, since they are to be found in various treatises, but the rest of his practices are less known. However, Eudoxus, in the seventh book of his Tour of the Earth, says he practiced so great purity, especially in avoidance of slaughter and slaughterers, that he not only ate no animal food but also never went near cooks and hunters.

Antiphon, in his book On the Life of Those Who Excelled in Virtue, describes the endurance Pythagoras showed in Egypt, saying that because he approved the way of life of the Egyptian priests and was anxious to participate in this, he besought the tyrant Polycrates [of Samos] to write his friend and former host Amasis king of Egypt, and ask that he [Pythagoras] might be permitted to share in the training of these aforesaid priests. And there the two stood, stare confronting smirk, Awhile uncertain which should yield the pas. Two Poets 6 : 106. C. 870.

Yoke. what if justice swerves . . . leaves life's yoke — Death should loose man from — fresh laid, past release ? Ber. de M. 6 : 296. C. 952.

the yoke of the Church is an easy one — Fits neck nor causes smart. Ponte A. 6 : 407 ; 7 : 47. C. 994.

You. Me, your own, your You, — Since, as truth is true, I was You all the happy past. Lovers' Q. 2 : 30. C. 173.

What, you, Sir, come too ? (Just the man I'd meet.) R. and B. 3 : 33. C. 427.

the world fades ; only you stand there ! In a B. 4 : 151. C. 372.

Yet the strong fierce heart's love's labor's due, Utterly lost, was — you ! Mary W. 6 : 206. C. 916.

You in the flesh and here — Your very self ! Bad D. II. 6 : 395 ; 7 : 16. C. 989.

Yours. I choose to be yours, for my proper part. Worst 4 : 170. C. 378.

Call me yours — Yours and the world's — yours and the world's and God's ! Inn A. 5 : 289. C. 792.

Yourself. Best be yourself, imperial, plain and true ! Bishop B. 4 : 93. C. 350.

With yourself it rests to have a month of morrows like to-day ! La S. 6 : 56. C. 850.

Young. must ever wear A darkened brow, an over-serious look, And never properly be young. Straf. 1 : 192. C. 74.

I was so young, I loved him so, I had No mother, God forgot me, and I fell. A Blot 2 : 157. C. 222.

I am very young, and yet I have entangled other lives with mine. A Blot 2 : 171. C. 227.

Young. but I was young, And your surpassing reputation kept me So far aloof! A Blot 2:172. C. 228.

We have been young, too,—come, there's greater guilt!
R. and B. 3:189. C. 489.

But—young you have been, are not, nor will be! R. and B. 3:426. C. 581.

Well, I resent this; I am young in soul, Nor old in body.
R. and B. 3:426. C. 581.

when we both were young, And I tasted the angels' fellowship.
Worst 4:171. C. 379.

Young, all lay in dispute; I shall know, being old. Ben Ezra 4:188. C. 384.

Had the epithet been 'rich,' 'Noble,' 'a genius,' even 'handsome,'—but 'Young'! Inn A. 5:259. C. 780.

Youngling. A youngling stem all green and immature. Joch. 6:225. C. 924.

Youth is the only time To think and to decide on a great course. Straf. 1:191. C. 74.

No! youth once gone is gone: Deeds let escape are never to be done. Sor. 1:240. C. 93.

Youth—my dream escapes! Will its record stay? Stat. and B. 2:327. C. 285.

Youth, with its beauty and grace, would seem bestowed on us . . . to make us partly endurable till we have time for really becoming so. Soul's Tr. 2:359. C. 298.

girl . . . With . . . first crisp youth that tempts a jaded taste, Was whisked i' the way of a certain man. R. and B. 3:39. C. 429.

O youth, men praise so,—holds their praise its worth?
Pict. Ig. 4:74. C. 342.

Youth shows but half; trust God: see all, nor be afraid!
Ben Ezra 4:185. C. 383.

but youth can reach Where age gropes dimly, weak with stir and strain. Death in D. 4:198. C. 388.

Youth, Stark ignorance and crude conceit, half smirk, half stare On that frank fool-face. Fifine 4:426. C. 726.

youth, Nigh on departure, bids mid-age discard Life's other loves and likings. Red Cott. 5:18. C. 743.

Few flowers that played with youth shall pester age. Red Cott. 5:30. C. 748.

as well not keep too close a watch; Youth must be left to some discretion. Red Cott. 5:31. C. 748.

think out thoroughly how youth should pass—Just as if youth stops passing, all the same! Ari. A. 5:147. C. 647.

he finds that youth fleets fast, That town-life tires, that men should drop boys'-play. Inn A. 5:302. C. 797.

Youth. Youth ripens to arrogance, foolishness, greed. Apol.
and F. 6:287. C. 949.

Youth's. track too rough For youth's unsteady footstep. Joch.
6:213. C. 919.
